Texts

"To this we've come...Papers, papers" from The Consul

To this we've come:
that men withhold the world from men.
No ship nor shore for him who drowns
at sea.
No home nor grave for him who dies
on land.

To this we've come:
that man be born a stranger upon God's earth,
that he be chosen without a chance
for choice,
that he be hunted without the hope of refuge.

To this we've come,
to this we've come:...
and you, you too, shall weep.

If to men, not to God, we now must
pray,
tell me, Secretary, tell me, who are these men?
If to them, not to God, we now must
pray,
tell me, Secretary, tell me.
Who are these dark arch-angels?
Will they be conquered?
Will they be doomed?

Is there one--any one behind these doors
to whom the heart can still be explained?
Is there one--any one who still may care?
Tell me, Secretary, tell me.

Have you ever seen the Consul?
Does he speak, does he breathe?
Have you ever spoken to him?

Papers! Papers!
But don't you understand?
What shall I tell you to make you understand?
My child is dead...
John's mother is dying...
My own life is in danger.
I ask for your help, and all you give me is... papers.

What is your name? Magda Sorel.
Age? Thirty-three.
Color of eyes?
Color of hair?
Single or married?
Religion and race?
Place of birth, Father's name,
Mother's name?

Papers! Papers!

Look at my eyes, they are afraid to sleep.
Look at my hands, these hold woman's hands.

Why don't you say something?
Aren't you secretaries human beings
like us?

What is your name? Magda Sorel.
What is your age? Thirty-three.

What will you papers do?
They cannot stop the clock.
They are too thin an armor against a bullet.

What is your name? Magda Sorel.
Age? Thirty-three.

What does that matter?
All that matters is that the time is late,
that I'm afraid and I need your help.

What is your name?

This is my answer.
My name is woman.
Age: still young.
Color of hair: gray.
Color of eyes: the color of tears.
Occupation: waiting.

Oh! the day will come, I know,
when our hearts aflame will burn your paper chains.
Warn the Consul, Secretary, warn
him.
That day neither ink nor seal shall cage our souls.
That day will come.

Program Notes

A Dream within a Dream

Dana Wilson

Born: February 4, 1946 in Lakewood, OH

The title for this piece comes from Edgar Allan Poe's poem "A Dream Within a Dream", and is a brief meditation (a piece within a piece) on Poe's dismay at the convoluted and illusive nature of life. The poem ends with a question: "Is all that we see or seem but a dream within a dream?" The piece, then, is a metaphor for my wonderful years working with wonderful students and colleagues in the School of Music, within the context of my overall life. Has it all been a dream?

As with many dreams, the work has an underlying persistent harmonic progression which acts like a musical chaconne. The work also relies on convoluted, repetitive melodic figures always yearning and seeking but constantly illusive (and elusive) in their search.

It was such a pleasure to write this short piece for Jeffery Meyer and the Ithaca College Symphony Orchestra. Jeff is a consummate musician and it has been terrific working with him in recent years, and the orchestra includes many of the school's finest musicians.

"To this we've come...Papers, papers" from The Consul

Gian Carlo Menotti

Born: July 7, 1911 in Cadegliano-Viconago, Italy

Died: February 1, 2007 in Monte Carlo, Monaco

Menotti began his career as an opera composer in 1938 with Amelia Goes to the Ball, while he was still a student at the Curtis Institute for Music in Philadelphia. Amelia was a one-act opera which brought Menotti critical acclaim. Twelve years later in 1950, Menotti wrote The Consul, his first full-length opera in three acts, for which he won his first Pulitzer Prize (he earned his second in 1955 for The Saint of Bleeker Street).

The opera tells the story of a woman Magda's attempts to reunite with her husband. They are separated because he is a political dissident on the run from the secret police. Magda sings "To this we've come..." when she loses her temper at the Secretary of the Consul, who drowns her in endless paperwork as she tries to leave the country. This aria is her final attempt to meet with the Consul, though he yet again fails to come see her. She returns home and commits suicide rather than risking her husband returning to the country to get her.

Piano Concerto in G major

Maurice Ravel

Born: March 7, 1875 in Cibourne, France

Died: December 28, 1937 in Paris, France

In 1928, Ravel discovered jazz while on tour in America, where he became absolutely taken with the style. Ravel believed that concerto music should be “light-hearted and brilliant, and not aim at profundity or dramatic effects.” The product of these two traits is the playful piano concerto replete with references to jazz idioms.

The concerto opens with the snap of a whip, which sets off a whirring ticking buzz in the orchestra while the piccolo whistles a merry tune. The movement unfolds, at times mysterious, at times playful, with references to Gershwin’s famous Rhapsody in Blue. Towards the end, the harp plays a solo reminiscent of a Spanish guitar (Ravel himself came from the Basque region and grew up with that music). The piano cadenza that follows features trills in the melody, inspired by the warbling sounds of a musical saw.

The second movement Adagio begins with a long meditation for the piano, as the winds slowly make themselves known. The piano gradually takes on the role of accompanist and solo instruments take the melody. The English horn sings the sweet tune while the piano decorates it with a beautiful descant. The serene melody belies the difficulty that Ravel had in writing the movement: he eked it out one or two bars at a time, complaining that the process almost killed him.

The finale is a charming affair, living up to Ravel’s conviction that concerti should be light-hearted and brilliant. The movement is a bursting with activity and energy, with trombone smears and trumpet calls. The piece races to its rousing finish, ending with a snap of the whip and the bass drum, just as in first movement.

Prism Rhapsody II

Keiko Abe

Born: April 18, 1937 in Tokyo, Japan

Through her work as a composer and percussionist, Keiko Abe has transformed the marimba into a solo instrument. She has introduced many extended techniques and shown how it can be a featured instrument. As such, the piece Prism Rhapsody II is a concerto for two marimbas (the first Prism Rhapsody was for solo marimba), displaying the possibilities on the instrument as envisioned by Abe. The marimbists are asked to play virtuosic passages demanding double- and triple-mallet work, showing off an instrument that is melodic and also has wide array of timbres.

La Mer

Claude Debussy

Born: August 22, 1862 in Saint-Germain-en-Laye, France

Died: March 25, 1918 in Paris, France

In 1903, Claude Debussy said to a friend that he was “destined for the fine career of a sailor.” While circumstances may have led Debussy away from that path, La Mer is his three-movement tribute to the sea. When the piece received its premiere in 1905, it was not well-received—partly because it was under-rehearsed, and partly owing to the very public scandals surrounding Debussy’s love life at that time. The second performance of the piece’s 1909 version was much more successful and placed the piece in the core standard orchestral repertoire.

The first movement, “From dawn to noon at the sea”, begins with a haze of sounds from the timpani and double basses. One by one, instruments grow out of this haze as Debussy depicts a bright sunrise over the seascape. Debussy lays the scene bringing various elements of the sea in and out of the focus: the strings show undulating waves, the winds give a whirl evocative of seabirds, while the horns perhaps represent a large sea creature. The movement closes with a noble and brilliant fanfare. The title of the movement is not meant to imply an exact timeline for the piece, but rather the transition from indistinct darkness to bright and clear daytime (though Erik Satie, Debussy’s fun-loving friend, joked that he “particularly liked the bit at a quarter to eleven”).

The second movement, “Games of the waves”, serves as a scherzo-like movement, perhaps justifying in part why Debussy called La Mer a symphonic sketch. The opening of the movement is a perfect depiction of Impressionist artists’ fascination with the sea: water with its ever-changing surface and unknown depth gave an endless array of possibilities for artists to toy with. With an exciting climax forming its heart, the movement closes as it opens: mysterious and shimmering.

The final movement of La Mer, “Dialogue of the wind and the sea”, is a tumultuous affair, coming to a rousing finale as the wind and sea clash against one another.
